Changing people's habits takes time. Even though many people are interested in watching television on the Internet, some may not want to make the switch completely. And some might be persuaded to, but only under certain circumstances. According to Harris, almost half of television viewers (44 percent) would cancel their cable television if they could get the same programs for free online. However, the number fell to 16 percent when people were told they had to pay a small fee for online viewing. This is strange, since most household's monthly cable bills are more than what they would pay for the same shows online. It's possible that people have become so used to getting online entertainment for free that they learn not to value it as much.

Scientists believe that crying has something to do with how humans developed and learned to depend on each other. "Humans are very complex social creatures," says Lauren Bylsma, a professor of psychiatry. "It seems that tears serve to elicit help and support from others." She says another reason we weep is that humans have the longest developmental period of almost any animal. Another psychiatrist agrees. "I think that the reason humans shed emotional tears has to do with our prolonged childhood," he says. "That's the time when we are still dependent on adults for love and protection and care. The major advantage of tears is that you can target them at a specific person."
